Poetry Senior	Loving Work Irene Newman my mom walked across the Golden Gate Bridge each day to work. she felt the bridge sway in the wind, watched divorced couples throw their rings down to the water below. she loved the walk because she loved where it took her— still breathless that she was paid to cook all day. my dad broke the bridge of his nose because he does everything with the same intensity. he told me he doesn't mind waking up in the dark of the morning because he loves what he does. now my task is to build— craft sketches of bridges, sharp lines across an architect's graph paper, to connect all the things I love (communication, children, community and compassion) into a career. Irene Newman Charlottesville H.S. Charlottesville, VA	A Plan for the Future Focus, formulate, frame, foresee the future. Pressured for goals and guidelines for time occupation and preparation. Find the interest, devote energy to plan to work life away. The path in sight is open and plain and waiting for decoration and experience. Time and exertion won't be spent now. Future is life, purely waiting, patiently, to be passed and prized. The point and purpose will be found along the way. Bryan Hancock Charlottesville H.S. Charlottesville, VA
